

EXCLUSIVE! TERRY McMILLAN TELLS ALL ABOUT HER GAY EX

The Advocate

ESTABLISHED 1969

the gay & lesbian newsmagazine

Advocate
INTERVIEW

A SUPERSTAR COMES OUT

WNBA most valuable player Sheryl Swoopes unveils her life as a gay woman and mom

PLUS HOLIDAY GIFT GUIDE • NICK CARTER

PHOTOGRAPH BY CHRISTOPHER
MORRIS

Leaves of glass

Gay craftsmen Eric Markow and Thom Norris create unique works of art by weaving glass

Markow (left) and Norris, the artists behind the colorful woven glass, are shown here in their workshop.

“When we go to the store, it’s always like, ‘What do you like? This one? That one? Do you like that?’” says Thom Norris, who works alongside his partner, Eric Markow, in Washington, D.C. “I’d say, ‘That’s nice. That’s nice.’”

Markow and Norris have used the technique to create colorful, textured glass objects that look like leaves, fabric, and other forms. “There’s a lot of great materials for this,” says Norris. “But the most fun for both our relationship and the business is doing something you can’t really make in a factory.”

Their studio, which began in 2008, is a converted gas garage. In 2010, they moved to a new space in Washington, D.C. “It was a great move,” says Norris. “We were doing great and we were getting more and more orders.”

They also have a lot of experience with glass. “I’ve been an artist for 10 years,” says Norris. “I’ve been a glass artist for 10 years.” Markow and Norris have been working with glass for 10 years. “I’ve been a glass artist for 10 years,” says Norris. “I’ve been a glass artist for 10 years.”

Markow and Norris are both artists and designers. They have worked together for 10 years. “I’ve been a glass artist for 10 years,” says Norris. “I’ve been a glass artist for 10 years.”