Leaves of glass

Gay craftsmen Eric Markow and Thom Norris create unique works of art by weaving glass

“When we go to the store, it’s always the sales clerk who asks you if you want to buy it,” says Thom Norris, who works alongside his partner, Eric Markow. He has a collection of “leaf” bowls, “one of our most popular $100 bowls that look like a leaf.”

Markow and Norris have used their partnership to create a unique work of art that is both functional and beautiful. “There’s a lot of great materials for this,” says Norris. “But we’ve found that our relationship with the materials is very important. We want to make sure we’re getting the best quality materials and that we’re getting the best price for what we’re doing.”

Their mission, which began in 2008, was to create a glass product that was both functional and beautiful. “We wanted to create a product that was both functional and beautiful,” says Norris. “We wanted to create a product that was both functional and beautiful.”

They discovered that using high-quality glass was the key. “We wanted to create a product that was both functional and beautiful,” says Norris. “We wanted to create a product that was both functional and beautiful.”

Markow and Norris are both gay men and their partnership is a testament to the power of love. “We wanted to create a product that was both functional and beautiful,” says Norris. “We wanted to create a product that was both functional and beautiful.”
